Constellation by Jonathan Wright has been selected as the first artwork to be displayed on the Hove Plinth. It is a perfect fit for the location, an imaginative celebration of our community which puts Hove in its own solar system. Wright’s design is part mechanical model of the solar system, part film camera and part ship’s compass. The most popular landscapes and iconic images associated with Hove will orbit the system rather than planets. The sculpture will move slightly and cast beautiful shadows on the promenade. The artist will use innovative 3D printing technology as part of the production. The image shows a small model of Constellation with illustrative icons.

You can help us design the first sculpture for the Hove Plinth

We need the community's help to choose the objects that go on the final sculpture.

We need your views on the most exciting, relevant or significant places and landmarks in Hove that make it a special and interesting place. We need your suggestions for objects that communicate why people love to live in Hove and why it is a place to be proud of. We want the sculpture to communicate your love of Hove, why it is special to you and "What Makes Hove Hove".

The workshops will be delivered in collaboration with the Hove Museum and Brighton Museum and The University of Brighton and Hove Civic Society. Using the Museums as the location for the workshops will provide the best context for the discussion of relevant places and objects/landmarks that may best suit the needs of the Artwork. There is no age limit to attend

The key objective of the workshops is to make a selection of objects for the sculpture which are relevant to the local community.
